

In response to the FCC's consideration of tracking all available WiFi hotspots and VoIP solutions I submit my 2 cents on the matter. Where in the FCC charter does it give you the authority to maintain data or mandated a means by which to track me? You have no right knowing where I am at the time I make a phone call unless I specifically want you to know. I do not want my phone being tracked by a GPS system. I don't carry a cell phone unless I can turn off the network locator, I don't use On-Star vehicle tracking system, and I don't want to have my VOIP system tracked by you either. Further more I don't want you to waste my tax dollars attempting to "map" all available WiFi hotspots. How on earth do you propose to locate ALL hotspots? Specifically those in homes? Ever heard of privacy? You have no business knowing what I have in my home. Get a real job!
